ABOUT THE JOURNAL

Lectio: A Graduate Journal of Philosophy

The Graduate School and the Department of Philosophy
University of Santo Tomas

LECTIO is an interdisciplinary, peer-reviewed and open access journal of Philosophy that aims to give graduate students an avenue to develop and publish their philosophic researches. Though primarily intended for philosophy majors, the journal also welcomes submissions from allied disciplines (literature, sociology, history, political science, anthropology, economics, cultural studies, etc.) with pronounced philosophic content.

The Latin lectiō (-ōnis) refers to mindfulness in reading texts. It stems from the verb legere which conveys various notions such as gathering and selecting, reading and reciting, and even traversing horizons and events. LECTIO is an intentional engagement of a single text by negotiating the horizons of multiple interpretations. This was something exhibited by St. Thomas Aquinas who devoted himself to a scholastic life of lectio, disputatio, and reputatio: St. Thomas Aquinas boldly negotiated the contentious horizons of Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, Ibn Rushd and his other interlocutors to articulate a new event for philosophic discourse. Similarly, through our own lectio, we seek to cultivate that disposition of reading and selecting, of challenging our thoughts and expanding our philosophical horizons.

As a platform for intellectual exchange, LECTIO provides a forum for dialogue among MA and PhD students to help them cultivate their craft of research as they seek to establish their own voice within academic circles. This journal thus seeks to promote a wide range of philosophical topics aligned with the research thrusts of the Department of Philosophy, to wit:

- Filipino Philosophy
- Oriental Thought and East-West Comparative Philosophy
- Aristotelian-Thomistic Philosophy and Scholasticism
- Continental European Philosophy
- Contemporary philosophical issues and trends

LECTIO publishes annually and is committed to meet the highest standards in graduate research publication. All submissions are therefore subject to a double-blind peer review process.
